Thomas C. Cambier represents national insurance carriers, trucking and transportation entities and local insurance companies in a wide variety of legal matters including coverage disputes and litigation. Focusing his practice on high exposure liability issues, Mr. Cambier provides clients with practical and cost-effective solutions to a broad range of claims and is regularly called upon to advise and defend clients in matters related to trucking litigation, trucking accidents, accident investigation, construction accidents, labor law claims, OSHA investigations and premises and products liability issues.

Mr. Cambier represents clients in administrative and civil litigation in state and federal courts. He has successfully defended Fortune 500 companies in complex multi-million-dollar personal injury and wrongful death suits and regulatory claims.

In addition, he advises clients concerning compliance with safety regulations, the Motor Carrier Safety Act and the Department of Transportation; the best practices to limit exposure including the negotiation and review of contracts and leases; compliance with recordkeeping requirements; and OSHA and contamination matters.

Mr. Cambier frequently advises self-insured entities on policies and procedures when handling claims, regulatory compliance, coverage analysis and, when necessary, litigation. He also represents commercial and residential construction companies in matters related to payment disputes, liens, workplace accidents and personal injury litigation, and represents businesses and individuals in commercial, intellectual property and product liability litigation.

He is a partner in the Firm's Litigation Department and a member of the Next Generation Committee, providing mentoring and professional development for younger attorneys in the Firm.
