Alex is a motivated individual with a passion and drive for creative problem-solving. She is motivated by a challenge, and she understands the importance of clear communication, collaboration, and efficiency. Alex focuses her practice in commercial litigation.

In law school, Alex served as the Wake Forest Journal of Law and Policy's online editor and participated in the Wake Forest Litigation Clinic where she worked both in a courthouse and in a general counsel's office. Alex's undergraduate degree is in Politics and International Affairs, and she has minors in Mathematics; Journalism; and Schools, Education, and Society. This diverse educational background provides her with a well-rounded perspective and helps her approach problems from various perspectives.

In her free time, Alex enjoys spending time with her dog, friends, and family and enjoying the outdoors. During the fall, you can catch Alex at Wake Forest home football games. Alex also loves traveling and experiencing the world through food. Her love of food started with travel and has migrated into her home where she spends most Sunday nights experimenting with new recipes and various flavors.
