

'I Have a Right to Know!' Well, Maybe: Inspection Rights in Nonprofit Corporations

Written By Adam M. Beaudoin (amb@wardandsmith.com)

October 15, 2011

Although a nonprofit corporation does not have to file an annual report, its members do have statutory inspection rights similar to those of the shareholders of a business corporation. Rarely, however, do members or the board of directors understand exactly what corporate documents the members are entitled to inspect or the limitations accompanying such inspection rights.

Unqualified Inspection Rights for Members of Nonprofit Corporations

The North Carolina Nonprofit Corporation Act ("Act") requires nonprofit corporations to make certain documents available for its members to inspect and copy. Any member has the right to inspect and copy nine types of documents without qualification, so long as the member notifies the nonprofit corporation in writing at least five business days in advance of the requested inspection.

The nonprofit corporation, in turn, has the right to specify the time and location for the member to inspect or copy the documents, but the time and location must be reasonable.

The nine classes of documents subject to an unqualified right to review are:

1. The corporation's Articles of Incorporation, including all amendments;
2. The corporation's Bylaws, including all amendments;
3. All resolutions adopted by the members or the board of directors relating to the number or classification of the corporation's directors;
4. All resolutions adopted by the members or the board of directors relating to the characteristics, qualifications, rights, limitations, and obligations of its members or any class or category of members;
5. Minutes of all membership meetings for the prior three years;
6. Records of all actions taken by the membership without a meeting for the prior three years;
7. All written communications within the prior three years from the corporation to the members as a group;
8. The names and business or home addresses of the corporation's current directors and officers; and,
9. The annual financial statements, if any, prepared during the prior three years, subject to the following requirements:
 - a. If the annual financial statement was reported upon by a public accountant, the accountant's report must accompany the financial statement.

b. If the annual financial statement was not reported upon by a public accountant, then the financial statement should be accompanied by the following:

i. A statement by the president or other person affirming that person's reasonable belief as to whether the statements were prepared on the basis of generally accepted accounting principles and, if not, describing the basis of preparation; and,

ii. A statement describing any respect in which the statements were not prepared on a basis of accounting practices consistent with the statements prepared for the preceding year.

However, it is important to note that a nonprofit corporation is not required to have any financial statements at all, but if it does, such statements must be kept at the principal office of the corporation and furnished to the members upon demand, except that a charitable or religious corporation can limit or completely deny inspection of its financial statements by provisions in its Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.

Qualified Inspection Rights for Members of Nonprofit Corporations

In addition to the unqualified rights above, each member of a nonprofit corporation has the qualified right to inspect and copy seven types of permanent records of the corporation, so long as the member notifies the corporation in writing at least five business days in advance, and so long as the member satisfies the following requirements:

1. The member must make the demand to inspect or copy the documents in good faith and for a proper purpose.
2. The member must describe with reasonable particularity the purpose behind the member's request to inspect and copy the records and which records the member desires to inspect and copy.
3. The records that the member identifies must be directly connected with (or related to) the member's stated purpose for wanting to inspect or copy those records.

The corporation has the right to specify the time and location for the member to inspect or copy the records, but the time and location must be reasonable.

If the member satisfies the above requirements, then the corporation must provide the member with the opportunity to inspect and copy any of the seven types of permanent records below:

1. The minutes of all meetings of the corporation's members;
2. The corporation's record of all actions taken by the members without a meeting;
3. The minutes of all meetings of its board of directors;
4. The corporation's record of all actions taken by the directors without a meeting;
5. The record of all actions taken by committees of the corporation in place of, and on behalf of, the board;
6. The accounting records of the corporation; and,
7. The corporation's membership list (names and mailing addresses), but subject to the limitation that the member's inspection of the corporation's membership list must not be used without the board's consent for any purpose unrelated to the member's interest as a member of the corporation. Accordingly, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, and without the consent of the board, a membership list or any part thereof cannot be:

a. Used to solicit money or property unless such money or property will be used solely to solicit the votes of the members in an election to be held by the corporation;

b. Used for any commercial purpose; or,

c. Sold to or purchased by any person.

A member of a nonprofit corporation does not have a statutory right to view any nonprofit corporation document or record not listed on the two lists above. For example, a member does not have the right to view a contract between the corporation and a third party unless that contract is itself a part of one of the documents listed above or the board of directors voluntarily agrees to release the contract to the membership. So, in the unusual event that a contract was incorporated into the minutes from a board meeting, only then would a member have the legal right to view the contract.

Inspection Rights for Condominium and Homeowners Associations

Almost every condominium or homeowners association in North Carolina is formed as a North Carolina nonprofit corporation. Accordingly, its members are limited to the same document inspection rights as any other nonprofit corporation; provided, however, an owners' association must keep accurate records of all cash receipts and expenditures and all assets and liabilities and must make an annual income and expense statement and balance sheet available to all owners at no charge within 75 days after the close of the fiscal year to which the information relates.

Rights Versus Wisdom

This article discusses the enforceable legal rights of members to inspect their nonprofit corporation's documents. Of course, just because the corporation is not required to disclose a requested document does not mean it is prohibited from doing so. Many fractious battles in nonprofit corporations are based on a corporation's refusal to disclose a document not on the above lists, the disclosure of which would result in no harm to the corporation or anyone else. Instead, the non-disclosure fosters ill will and suspicions that "shenanigans" are taking place. Perhaps more often than not, disclosure would be beneficial to the corporation's reputation and bottom line. Just because the corporation is not required to disclose does not mean it shouldn't.

Summary

Members of nonprofit corporations are entitled to inspect and retain copies of certain corporate records and information. The governing documents of most nonprofit corporations (i.e., Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws, etc.) do not specify which documents members are entitled to inspect, but rather make a broad statement that the books and records of the corporation will be available for inspection by the members. While the governing documents may generally identify documents a member may request, the extent of that right and the actual documents that must be made available for inspection are determined by the Act. Consequently, if a member of a nonprofit corporation asks to view or copy documents not outlined above, the nonprofit corporation has no legal obligation under North Carolina law to make such document available for inspection or copying. Unless the corporation's Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws say otherwise, the nonprofit corporation has the right to deny the member's request to inspect or copy the documents.

Copyright 2011, Ward and Smith, P.A.

For further information regarding the issues described above, please contact Adam M. Beaudoin.

This article is not intended to give, and should not be relied upon for, legal advice in any particular circumstance or fact situation. No action should be taken in reliance upon the information contained in this article without obtaining the advice of an attorney.

We are your established legal network with offices in Asheville, Greenville, New Bern, Raleigh, and Wilmington, NC.