Ellis Boyle has been appointed to the Disciplinary Hearing Commission (DHC) of the North Carolina State Bar.

This appointment was made during the recent session of the North Carolina General Assembly.

Ellis, a seasoned litigation attorney, has consistently demonstrated an unwavering commitment to upholding the highest standards of legal practice. His appointment to the DHC is a testament to his professionalism, integrity, and deep understanding of the law.

The Disciplinary Hearing Commission is the trial arm of the State Bar and is composed of 12 lawyers and eight non-attorneys. It plays a critical role in maintaining the ethical standards of the legal profession in North Carolina. It oversees cases involving attorney misconduct, ensuring that justice is served and the public trust is upheld.

Ellis will serve a three-year term on the Commission.
