

Ward and Smith Launches Hemp Law Practice Group

June 10, 2019

The exponential rise of hemp in North Carolina is only paralleled by the growing legal complexities and challenges that come with efforts to regulate it. But Ward and Smith can help.

The firm recently announced the formation of its Hemp Law Practice Group to help clients in all aspects of the hemp and cannabidiol (“CBD”) industries, both in North Carolina and beyond, to navigate the rules, regulations, and restrictions that could threaten the success of their businesses.

"Farmers, investors, and new and existing businesses are all racing to join the hemp industry because of the new opportunities created by this cash crop," stated Tyler Russell, Hemp Law Practice Group co-chair. "There's no doubt in our minds that hemp is vital to our state, and we are dedicated to ensuring the longevity of this industry in North Carolina."

The Hemp Law Practice Group leverages the experience of attorneys in agribusiness, business, tax, finance, intellectual property, government relations, and litigation practices to address hemp and CBD industry clients' individual needs, including but not limited to:

- Licensing for growers, processors, and other industry participants
- Grower agreements, seed agreements, farm leases, and other operational documents
- Hemp and CBD processing, extraction, manufacturing, and retail operations
- Product liability issues
- Mergers and acquisitions
- Local, state, interstate, and international sales
- Regulatory compliance
- Land use and zoning issues
- Protecting hemp and CBD brands, plant varieties and genetics, formulas, recipes, trade secrets, and other intellectual property
- State and federal banking regulations impacting hemp businesses
- CBD and employee drug testing issues

"In many ways, hemp is a lot like blockchain technology. It's new with the power to transform a lot of different industries; it's garnering interest from people and companies from all types of backgrounds; and, it's surrounded today by regulatory uncertainty," remarked Allen Trask, Hemp Law Practice Group co-chair. "That's why it is imperative that individuals and businesses seek ongoing legal counsel to stay within the confines of state and federal laws, and Ward and Smith's attorneys are ready to assist, advise, and represent them."

For more information, visit Ward and Smith's Hemp Law practice page.